Community Center for Education Results

ABOUT THE ROAD MAP PROJECT

The Road Map Project is a collective impact initiative that began in 2010 to improve student achievement from cradle through college and career in seven King County, Washington school districts: Auburn, Federal Way, Highline, Kent, Renton, (South) Seattle, and Tukwila. Together, this region serves more than 90 percent of the county's high-poverty schools and has more than 127,000 K12 students, of whom 72 percent are of color, 55 percent are low-income, and 22 percent are English-language learners.

Through multisector collaboration with hundreds of partners, the Road Map Project aims to increase equitable policies and practices in education systems by 2020 and for 70 percent of its region's youth to earn a college degree or career credential by 2030.

ABOUT THE CCER DATA AND RESEARCH TEAM

The Community Center for Education Results (CCER) is a nonprofit created to staff and support the Road Map Project. The CCER data and research team developed and maintains a pre-kindergarten through college data warehouse that integrates several years of information across the region to support continuous improvement. The team uses various data science and research methods to develop reporting tools and papers—driven by the recommendations, experiences, and perspectives of the region's most-impacted communities.

BACKGROUND

SURVEY DEVELOPMENT

The Opportunity Youth Impacts of COVID-19 survey was developed by youth for youth, focusing on questions young people wanted to ask their peers. The goals were to uplift a set of recommendations for action. This research guide is intended to make this youth survey instrument and methodology publicly available and accessible for youth serving organizations and schools.

The survey closed on May 31, 2020 and received 215 responses. The sample was 82% people of color (28% Latinx, 17% Black or African American, 20% Asian or Asian American, 11% Multiracial, 5% Pacific Islander, 1% Native American/Alaskan Native), and 63% identified as female. Majority of responses were from Tukwila, South Seattle, SeaTac, Federal Way, and Burien. Forty-two percent of respondents were enrolled in comprehensive high schools, and 23% were enrolled in college. The remaining 35% were enrolled in alternative or reengagement schools or were out of school. The survey was administered through SurveyMonkey in English and Spanish. Many questions were open-ended so that young people could express their unique experiences in their own words. The findings summarized in the full report are based on descriptive analyses of survey responses, including qualitative coding, as well as follow up conversations with young people as we shared the findings with different groups of stakeholders over the course of the summer and collectively made meaning of the results.

The four open-ended questions were coded using a grounded theory approach with themes closely matching the wording used by young people. Reasoning codes were developed for each open-ended item so that they could be used in descriptive analyses and inform proposed recommendations for the In Their Own Words report.

Decision rules were developed to ensure codes reflected the breadth and frequency of student responses. These criteria were also informed by relevant literature in child development, education and Critical Race Theory (e.g., Garcia, López, & Vélez, 2018; Marks, & García Coll, 2018; Solórzano, & Yosso, 2002). Initial codes were then refined until there was a distinct set of codes or enough codes to ensure statistical power given the sample size. Rates of null, illegible or un-codable responses were under 9 percent for each item.
